

PSYC301 : Psychology of Gender

An examination of the ways in which psychologists think about and study the construct of gender. Topics discussed will include development and change of gender across the lifespan, the idea of gender over time within the field of psychology, and psychological perspectives on gender seen through the lens of society, culture, history and biology.

Credits 3

Lab/Clinical/Field Study Hours 0

Lecture Hours 3

Prerequisite Courses

PSYC101: General Psychology

MATH220: Statistical Methods

Prerequisites

To enroll in this course, student must be in the Advanced and Continuous Studies, A.S. degree program.